Mouth-to-mouth rescue breathing will become the new life saving method used by Pacific relephone employees in the Forrance area during 1960, ac-

Forrance area during 1960, actording to an announcement this week by company manager Dick Pyle.

The program was adopted by the company after careful medical study by the National Research Council had shown the mouth-to-mouth method superior to all other manual methods for reviving people who ods for reviving people who have stopped breathing regardless of cause.

"EVERYONE HAS an ideal esuscitator with him at all times — his own breathing system," Pyle pointed out. "It is ideal because it has the same breathing characteristics

as the suffocating victim."
The three major principals advocated by the American National Red Cross for performing mouth-to-mouth breathing are:

with the victim on his back,
(1) Open the air passage.
This is done by tilting the head back so that the jaw is nead back so that the jaw is in a "jutting-out" position.

(2) Keep the air passage open. This is done by cupping the base of the jaw in the palm of one hand and lifting

(3) BREATHE AIR into the victim. This is done by placing your mouth over the mouth (and/or nose) of the victim and blowing. While breathing into the victim, watch chest rise to make sure air passage to clear. Seal nose or mouth is clear. Seal nose or mouth with your cheek or hand if air is escaping. Remove mouth, take a deep breath and repeat.
